

Credit Market Strategies

Last Week in Credit Markets

European credit markets were negatively affected by concerns about AI-driven disruption across multiple sectors last week. Both the IG and HY spaces widened altogether, with IG Financials notes proving more resilient than the other segments. The risk-off mood led to a positive performance for government bonds, with visible decreases in yields in both core and peripheral countries.

Tactical View on Credit Markets

Corporates. Following three years of positive performance by Italian corporate bonds within our coverage, we believe that there is limited scope for further significant compression of credit spreads. However, amid moderate economic growth, political stability, favourable refinancing conditions and robust investor demand, the carry momentum could continue. In terms of the primary market, we expect gross supply to stabilise at solid levels, while net supply could slow, given rising debt maturities. Credit fundamentals should remain resilient, with rating momentum still in place, also driven by an improvement in the sovereign outlook. Guidance for 2025 was largely confirmed, indicating a slight re-leveraging trend in the segment, driven by substantial capital expenditure in transport infrastructure and utilities, acquisitions, and/or weaker operating performance. Conversely, the outlook for most HY issuers covered by us suggests further deleveraging, driven by continued favourable performance. We have identified INWIT, Mundys, Saipem, Telecom Italia and Webcor as Rising Star candidates, while we believe that Stellantis is at risk of becoming a Fallen Angel.

Banks. In 4Q25, Italian banks have delivered solid results. Net interest income has increased for the first time in the current rate cycle, supported by loan growth and stable margins. Commission income has benefited from positive seasonality and continued flows into assets under management. Asset quality remained stable, with no signs of material deterioration. Capital buffers remained robust, despite the M&A activity completed to date, leading banks to confirm or improve their generous capital repatriation to shareholders.

Looking ahead, 2026 guidance reinforced our expectation for a mid- to high-teens profitability across the sector. GDP growth and stable interest rates should support NII over the medium term, while a renewed focus on non-NII revenues (fees and insurance) is expected to underpin ongoing capital generation. Cost discipline remains a key strategic focus for banks into 2026, while the need to accelerate investments in technology is becoming more and more compelling. Following the end of the first wave of consolidation started between late 2024 and early 2025, investor attention is shifting to whether the banks involved can deliver the expected synergies and manage subsequent execution risks. We expect sector consolidation to continue into 2026.

Market Trends

European credit markets were negatively affected by concerns about AI-driven disruption across multiple sectors last week. Both the IG and HY spaces widened altogether, with IG Financials notes proving more resilient than the other segments. The risk-off mood led to a positive performance for government bonds, with visible decreases in yields in both core and peripheral countries.
